Dancing With Water: The New Science Of Water

Water is an investigation into water's liquid crystalline phase where water molecules create a repeating geometric array similar to the molecular pattern in a solid quartz crystal. Although the molecules remain mobile, they appear to move together as a coherent "whole." This is living water.

The only way many of the properties of water can be explained is by understanding that water has a unique molecular structure. Certain circumstances, discussed in detail in the book, Dancing with Water, encourage water to form a repeating, geometric, molecular pattern where water becomes a liquid crystal.
