Newmark Semantic And Communicative Translation

Newmark: semantic and communicative translation. Newmark's Approaches to Translation (1981) and A Textbook of Translation (1988) have been widely used on translator training courses and combine a wealth of practical examples of linguistic theories of meaning with practical applications for translation. Yet Newmark departs from Nida's receptor-oriented line, feeling that the success of equivalent effect is 'illusory' and that 'the conflict of loyalties, the gap between emphasis on ...

Newmark: semantic and communicative translation

In a sequel to a review of the translation theory of Peter Newmark, it is argued that there is a single best method of translating regardless of whether the translator takes a semantic, communicative, or other approach. Methods of translating and approaches to extracting the sense of the text are clearly distinguished.

Communicative translation is strictly functional and usually the work of a team. Semantic translation is linguistic and encyclopaedic and is generally the work of one translator. Among the translation problems Newmark discusses he gives special attention to the metaphor. He proposes seven procedures for its translation:

theory of semantic and communicative methods of translation

Newmark's semantic and communicative translations could be considered as medium restricted, text type restricted and problem restricted theory, as it deals with human translation only, is restricted to the translation of expressive, informative and vocative texts, and is concerned with the problem of matching text type with translation method.

By the contrast, Newmark's translation theory is based on the comparative linguistics and mainly the semantics. The great contribution of Peter Newmark is his semantic and communicative translation and text-category theory, which provide effective and scientific guidance for translation practice.

A Comparative Study of Nida and Newmark's Translation Theories

Peter Newmark on translation, adapted for alignment. In his Textbook on Translation, Peter Newmark proposes to look at translation methods as a continuum between the emphasis on Source Language (SL) and the emphasis on Target Language (TL). Newmark then considers a scale of eight levels: Word-for-word translation (strongest emphasis on SL)

Newmark (1991:10-12) writes of a continuum existing between "semantic" and "communicative" translation. Any translation can be "more, or less semantic—more, or less, communicative—even a particular section or sentence can be treated more communicatively or less semantically." Both seek an "equivalent effect."

Translation procedures, strategies and methods

In Peter Newmark's famous book Approaches to Translation two translation theories are introduced: Semantic Translation and Communicative Translation. He claimed that. "Communicative Translation attempts to produce on its readers an effect as close as possible to that obtained on the readers of the original".
