The Big Nowhere La Quartet

Book two in the L. A. Quartet, 'The Big Nowhere' by James Ellroy, is a dark nightmarish noir mystery. It can be read as a standalone. Ellroy writes in chopped up sentences, which mostly describe horrific police and underworld corruption and sadism in short sentences and word semaphores.

The Big Nowhere (L.A. Quartet, #2) by James Ellroy

Sandwiched between "The Black Dahlia" and "L.A. Confidential," "The Big Nowhere" is James Ellroy's second book in his L.A. Quartet series (which concludes with "White Jazz"). For me, this book had a good enough beginning, but seemed to drag somewhat during the middle.

Three men are plunged into a maelstrom of violence and deceit when their lives become inextricably linked as each one confronts his own personal darkness. The second of the LA Quartet, the epigraph for The Big Nowhere is a passage from a novel; "It was written that I should be loyal to the nightmare of my choice- Joseph Conrad Heart of Darkness."

The Big Nowhere (L.A. Quartet) - Kindle edition by Ellroy ...

The Big Nowhere blends the crime novel and the political novel. It is winter, 1950—and the L.A. County Grand Jury is out to slam movieland Reds. It's a reverential shuck—and the three cops assigned to the job are out to grab all the glory they can. A series of brutal sex killings intervenes, and the job goes all-the-way bad.

At the same time, while The Big Nowhere doesn't have the staccato style of Ellroy novels, it is direct, graphic, and hard hitting. This is fast making it as a classic of the genre. The last two novels in the L.A. Quartet, by the way, are L.A. Confidential and White Jazz. I am looking forward to reading them.

the crime segments: The Big Nowhere, by James Ellroy

An indescribably awesome work, culminating the quartet that began with The Black Dahlia. Elroy's writing style is distilled and refined to a fine minimalism, like the music of Anton Webern. You must read the preceding books or the density of writing will overwhelm you. Pure cop talk, sentence structure often abandoned.
